Allen W. Dulles, Esq.,

Dear Dulles:

A couple of years ago when I was working at Columbia,
I was aided by one of the brilliant G. I. students in the Graduate School, [redacted] [redacted] [redacted]

[redacted] During the last war he entered the Army, taught officers for 18 months at Fort Binney and then saw overseas service in the Philippines and Japan, finishing it as a captain.

He is once more faced with entering the service and anxious, owing to what he believes to be his special qualifications, to enter the Intelligence Service of the State Department, or if not there, of the Army.

Is it asking too much to request for him a few words of enlightenment and advice from you? If it were the Naval Service he wished, why then I might be of service to him.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

John A. Gade

He is about to take his doctor's degree.
